

I am more concerned about the effect filthy language and "pseudo"pornographic images will have on children. There is definitely way too much of that. There is also too much violence but if there is no underlying respect for language and women are shown as sex objects then there will be no basis for understanding why violence is wrong. Less vulgarity, near nudity, sexual situations and violence is very much needed. Err on the side of protecting children with the standards. Too many shows are yelling fire and then claiming it is freedom of speech when the violence, sex and language cause children to be trampled by the content just like people would in a crowded theater if someone yelled "fire". Do the right thing and protect our children from cable content.
